Telomerase is a ribonucleoprotein that regulates telomere length. The hTERT enzyme catalyzes the synthesis of telomerase RNA and is overexpressed in most human tumors. Inhibitors of the hTERT enzyme are potential anticancer leads. A computational strategy that utilized a homology model for the telomerase RNA was used to design inhibitors of the hTERT enzyme. The model is based on the published crystal structure of the catalytic site of the ribonucleoprotein from the yeast Saccharomyces cerevisiae telomerase. A triazine-based library of heteroaromatic rings incorporating a triazole core, and a library of substituted acridines were synthesized and screened. The most potent inhibitors are reported herein. The crystal structure of an acridine variant complexed with hTERT reveals a binding mode similar to that of the known anticancer lead, 2'-deoxyguanosine. The compounds described in this report represent the first example of inhibitors for the telomerase RNA component of the telomerase ribonucleoprotein.Q: Trigger an event with a specific type to each row in SQL Server I have 2 tables: Table1 Id Name 1 ABC 2 DEF 3 GHI Table2 Id Table1Id Type 1 1 A 2
