Work is also currently ongoing to develop a commercial version of the classroom management system, but there is a further reason for interest in the single-system approach. Though the classroom management system is available to schools that want to use it, it is expensive to purchase and run, and each of the schools that use it is required to purchase the system and then pay a per-head licence for using it. The single-system approach would be cheaper to set up and run for each school that used it. However, the major benefits of this approach would be that if a school wanted to use another classroom management system in addition to the single-system one, it would not have to purchase and run a second system for it, and if a school wanted to change from a single-system approach to another, it would not have to purchase a 2d92ce491b
